

LITERARY NOTES.

A translation of Bernhard ten Brink's "Early English Literature" is announced as immediately forthcoming by Henry Holt & Co.

"Johnson's Enemies," the new story which the author of "Ginx's Baby" has just published in London, is said to be over-long, and a failure in the matter of good taste.

Harper's Weekly will begin in its next number the publication of a series of illustrated articles on Old Philadelphia, the bi-centennial anniversary of the city being the occasion of these articles.

Mr. Hubert H. Bancroft's "History of the Pacific States" is so far advanced that the first volume will appear in a few weeks. Mr. Bancroft has made, preparatory to this work, a collection of books, MSS., etc., numbering 35,000 volumes.

The late Dr. Pusey knew little of any modern literature, which he used to say, was after his time. With Tennyson and the various late schools of poetry which flourished during the last generation he was almost, if not wholly unacquainted. To Sir Walter Scott he remained faithful to the last, and knew him as Lamb knew Shakespeare.

The book on Korea which Mr. Griffis has written and the Scribner's are about to publish for that little-known country, it is said, what Wallace's work does for Russia. It is exhaustive, as far as it is now possible to be. It gives the latest particulars in regard to Korean life, wars and national affairs, having been brought down to include the recent events.

A beautiful new edition of "Evelyn's Diary" in four stately volumes has just been brought out in London. The volumes are adorned by a number of engraved and Woodbury-type illustrations, most of them from rare, and a few from unique prints. The editor did not find it possible to go back to the original source, Mr. W. J. Evelyn, the present representative of the family, having refused, or at least, indefinitely deferred access to the MS. in his possession. Mr. Evelyn declares, however, that "Colburn's third edition of the Diary was very correctly printed from the MS., and may be relied on as giving an accurate text." This scarce library edition of 1827 has therefore been reproduced in the present volumes, a new life to the author by Mr. H. B. Wheatley, being added, by way of special feature.

There are pleasant things about Bulwer in Bulwer's recently published life of the poet. Freiligrath. "Bulwer no sooner heard that I was in England," the exiled poet wrote in 1847 to one of his friends, "than he wrote me a most hearty letter inviting me to go and stay some time with him at his country house, Knebworth Park! His unprovoked approximation to me at this time and in this manner has greatly rejoiced me. He has just paid me a visit, attended by his son, a fine young fellow in his sixteenth year—the present Lord Lytton. Freiligrath, as the biography states, was not the only eminent German whom Lord Lytton generously befriended. He supported Heinrich Ernst, "ganz und gar," with his wife and servant, during the last years of his life, when Ernst was rendered quite incapable through illness of earning anything by his art. In answer to a letter of thanks which he received after Ernst's death in 1865, Lord Lytton wrote, in a letter hitherto unpublished, "I have always regarded Germany as my teacher. I honor and esteem her as a beloved friend to whom I owe great debts." The estee has proved reciprocal for Johannes Scherzer observes, in the second edition of his "Englische Literaturgeschichte," that "Bulwer is almost more popular in Germany than in his native land." It appears also that Lord Lytton was one of the great supporters of the "Freiligrath Donation," and that he assisted in bringing out the collected edition of the works of Julius Moser.
